and Three Years Wedded-A Splendid

Investigated By the Pension Office. Capt. Worrell always kept the muster rolls of his company and copies of his official papers, and upon those muster rolls depended the fate of most of the men of his company who desired pen-sions, and whose pensionable statuwas easily settled by reference to tho rolls. In this connection Capt. Worrell related with a good deal of satisfaction a story of how he was "investigated" by the Pension Office at Washington. The singularity attending all those of Co. B who applied for pensions was that they could tell almost to an hour when they were in hospital, when wounded, when THE MOST WONDERFUL STOVE furloughed for sickness or anything else that would give them a pensionable status.

The Commissioner of Pensions, some 20 years or less ago, concluded to find this "Capt. Worrell," and investigate on the sly the man who gave to the men of his company so glibly a pensionable status. The Pension Examiner came, called on Capt. Worrell under some other guise, and led him to talk freely of his regiment and company. Figure 1. The Commissioner of Pensions, som of his regiment and company. Finally the Examiner asked about the record of the last man who had applied for a pension, and Capt. Worrell gave it off-hand. The Examiner asked about another, and Capt. Worrell replied again with satisfactory evidence for the man to get a pension

Finally the Examiner remarked tha Capt. Worrell must have a very reten tive memory. Capt, Worrell replied that he had what was better, the company Taps Sounded for a Brave Veteran-Fifty rolls, and that he could give the histor; of every man who had ever served un-der him. The Special Examiner looked over the roll books, and after that when Harrison's Valveless, Wickless,
